

Nymburk, Nymburk dist., Central Bohemian Region

Museum at a prehistoric barrow

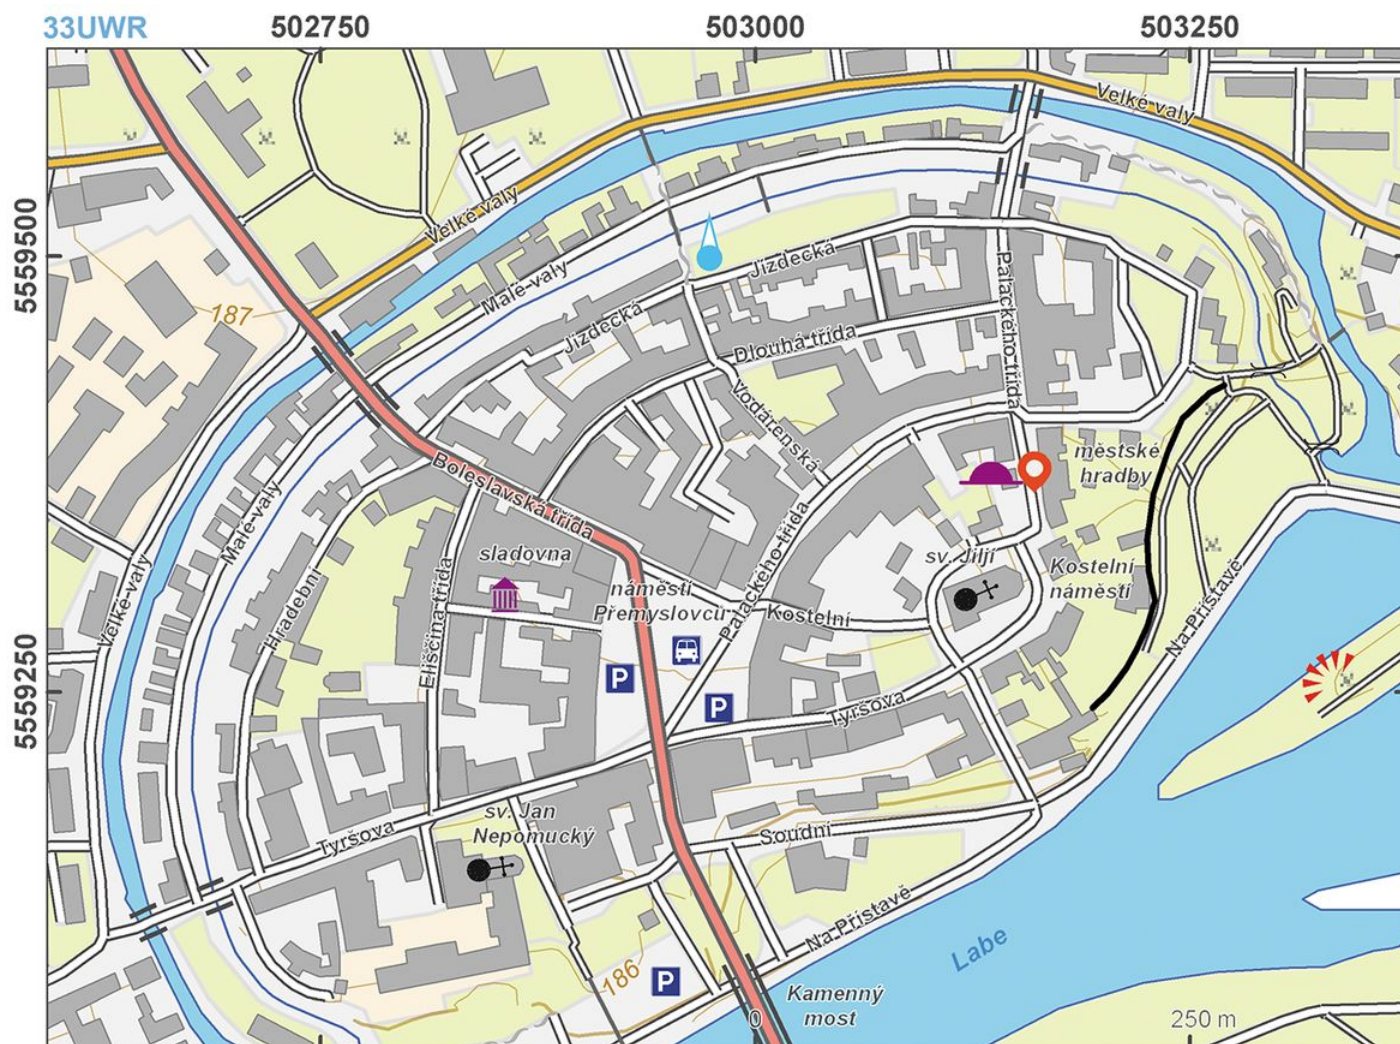

(3800–3400 BC)

A unique presentation of a grave chamber at the site of its discovery. The burial of a man in a stone chamber with an internal wooden construction was perhaps once covered by a barrow. Several potsherds date and results of radiocarbon dating make possible to date the monument to the Eneolithic Funnel Beaker culture (3800-3400 BC). Opened directly at the site in 2013, the museum allows visitors to see the uncovered barrow preserved in situ.

References: Motyková 1998, 2013a, 2013b.

Navigation points: N 50°11'11.47", E 15°02'39.00".

Access map / site plan.

After Kuna et al. 2014.

Unearthed stone construction of the barrow with a burial chamber and part of the access ramp.

Photo Z. Kačerová, 2013.

Unearthed foundations of the 16th century malthouse in basement of the municipal office.

Photo Z. Kačerová, 2013.

Panorama of the walls of Nymburk.

Photo Z. Kačerová, 2013.

Panorama of the walls of Nymburk, church of St Jiljí in the background.

Photo Z. Kačerová, 2013.